

Dewey: Hello, I'm Ned Schneebly.

Rosalie: Pat faxed me your resume .It's very impressive. We've never been in a bind like this before, so thank you so much for coming in.

Dewey: So how's this gonna work? Are you gonna pay me upfront?

Rosalie: I don't understand.

Dewey: It'd be really great if I could get paid in cash.

Rosalie: Oh, well, we don't do that.

Dewey: When you cut my check, make it payable to Dewey Finn, for tax reasons.

Rosalie: You can discuss all of that with Candace at the end of the day.

Dewey: When's the end of the day?

Rosalie: We commence at 8:15, school lets out at 3.

Dewey: You know what? Do you think I could cut out a little early today? I got some stuff I gotta do.

Rosalie: Mr. Schneebly...this is considered the best elementary school in the state, and we maintain that by adhering to a strict code of conduct, faculty included. If you have any problems with any students, send them to me I will do the disciplining.

Dewey: Check.

Rosalie: Children. Please take your seats. I'd like to introduce Miss Dunham's substitute.

This is Mr. Schneebly. Why don't you write your name on the board. Mr. S has never taught here at Horace Green, so I want you all to be on your best behavior. So the curriculum is on the desk. And do you have any questions?

Dewey: Yeah, when's lunch?

Rosalie: The children just had their lunch. Is there anything else you need?

Dewey: I'm a teacher. All I need are minds for molding.

Rosalie: All right, then. Well, thanks again. You saved the day.
